Oh, the moments whose echoes give sweetest replies.
The salats must have taught her; they still make my mouth water—
My mother's Connecticut turnover pies.

When in manhood I put on the harness of battle.

Preparing to fight through the campain of life:

When I heard the loud cannon and musket's quick rattle.

And nerved up my heart for the oncoming strife:

I filled up my belt with the seat ammubition,

And I shouldered my rife to do or to die. But I stocked with thoughts merry, that grab commissary With the precious Connecticut turn-over pie,

Oh, the days of my youth they have vanished forever;
The refreat has been sounded; the battles are done;
And now in old aged am waiting and never
Shall add to the triumphs of struggles then won.
But I still have the pleasure in the hours of my lessure (Though i oft makes me dream that my grandmother's nigh).
Of eating that delicious fried fruit so nutritious.
